A NEW AS POWER.

Much has been said and great excitement has prevailed in regard to the affairs of this Territory. We would not unnecessarily prolong this excitement, yet cannot refrain from making a few additional remarks to those who think for themselves.

It is well known to the people of this Territory that by the death of the lamented Governor Burt, the duties of his office have for a time fallen upon another. How far he has faithfully discharged those duties, the people must judge and pass their verdict accordingly. If his actions will bear the light, he has nothing to fear from a public examination, and if they will not, he is unworthy the place he occupies, and cannot expect the people to sustain him.

We will not stop to review his course of proceeding from the first until now. Wish most of those now present are already familiar.

We will, therefore, speak more particularly of his late acts.

It was understood the last organizing this Territory, it gives the Governor the power to select the place for the first meeting of the Legislature, when he has made such selection, his right in that respect is at an end. Every official act after that time by the public agents (and he does not cease to be a public agent while holding office) to prevent the free expression of the people is unwarranted and must be looked upon as a usurpation of powers that do not belong to him. An attempt to hinder the rightful free expression of opinion and a betrayal of the trust reposed in such by those who appointed him to office. The Organic Act Congress designed the Governor to locate the seat of Government, as would have been expressed in the bill. They did not design to give to such power into his hands, but into the hands of the Legislature, elected by, and representing the people, and the Governor the right to locate the place where the Legislature should hold its first session, that at that moment, at their place, the representatives of the people should be enabled to locate the seat of Government.

At first, the acting Governor had shown a disposition to place the seat of Government at a point, to both the people of Omaha and Nebraska, and there by protracted argument, many hours and days by the night, all the people of the Territory, and the many false influences here at work, a course of conduct. Failing to gain their ends by the honest efforts of the people, and finding that the struggle between the people and the Capital was going on. His every time the struggle between the people, and place, would have been carried on by them, but so far from this having been the case the Governor has been the foremost and the most desperate in the struggle for the city, and it has been the pressure of the people, and not any reluctance on his part, that the seat of government is where it is.

The Governor's proclamation in relation to the Capital, last week, that seems paramount to every duty that he has performed in the Territory, and shows clearly how far he is willing to go to carry out his own private ends.

In short, the acting Governor has

CONGRESSIONAL NEWS.

We compile the following items of Congressional news from our Washington exchanges.

December 14.

The Nebraska and Kansas business was resumed on the 13th, by Mr Mace's proposed amendment to the Missouri line.

Mr. Washburn, of Maine, made a powerful speech in favor of that measure.

Mr. Bayard, of Del. said he did not propose to resume a discussion of the Nebraska Bill. He would confine his remarks to a single point. There seemed to be a misapprehension in regard to the position of the Delaware Indians. He had not agreed with Mr. Mace that the treaty of 1854 had been abrogated by the non-payment of the annuities

AGRICULTURAL EDUCATION.

Why can agriculture be rural exterminated? All agree that agricultural education is at the present time, and that some means must be devised for its improvement, but how? Agricultural colleges have distinctly failed—experiment is fairly abandoned by the most intelligent men, and while they admit their usefulness for the preparation of teachers, all know that the children of those educated in these colleges become farmers. Even for the preparation of teachers, their use is doubted, and many, if not all, prefer those who have passed an apprenticeship practically, and who, in addition, have received such an education as included a knowledge of the natural sciences.

The pure chemist and the pure botanist are alike unqualified for such duties, while the few who have been found to every community who have practical as well as theoretical knowledge, to a sufficient degree, if all the schools in the country were provided with agriculture, and have applied them practically are at least able to meet the requirements as teachers, and would themselves to the current events of the community. Among such they would look for teachers, and their services would be entitled of as every way profitable.

Such men should be employed to lecture in agricultural districts. Such men should write books on the principles of agriculture for the use of common schools, and there would be a better practical knowledge of the principles of agriculture and, indeed on all the sciences, than has ever been taught to the children of the country. Applied science is always more available and understood than general principles, and that which many would be taught to regard the practical interest of the country as at least worthy of some consideration. What does a boy who leaves a country school, that will assist him in his after pursuit as a farmer? Are not nine-tenths of the boys so educated, likely to become farmers, and if so may be it that the study which most might be brought in which or in that in these schools, connected with the practical business with agriculture, and if so, by means of which and by which facts in the books they read, may be the mastery of the subject? Will mechanics or farmers ever forget a plan read but exercised with less pursuit?

The Arrison case was given to the jury this evening, and after being out only three hours, they returned a verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree.

Brisk Rivalry.—We are glad to learn that our energetic pioneer ferryman at Omaha is about to have a rival, Downs, is about to run a weekly stage from Omaha to Nebraska City, via Bellevue, St. Mary, Lawrence and Thompson's ferry.

The world is a great and marvelous book, and he who reads but a few pages of it, though carefully and attentively, has only caught a glimpse of the business in hand that he was born to do.

LITERARY NOTICES.

Arthur's Home Magazine.—This popular magazine for January, is on our table. Mingled with the amusing and entertaining articles, are many that are instructive. Published by T. S. Arthur, at $2 a year.

Graham's American Monthly.—This work ranks high among the periodicals of the country. Each number contains a splendid steel engraving.

Published by Richard H. Lee & Co. Philadelphia, at $3 a year.

Western Casket or Religious and Literary.—Edited by Rev. S. A. Hellyman, St. Louis, Mo. Price $1.00 a year.

The Casket is a beautiful little work and should be extensively patronized.

Cuba tobacco seed, planted in Texas, proves to be an abundantly yielding crop.

There is one religious society to each thousand of the four thousand inhabitants of New York.

The Body of Dr. Franklin Found by Dr. Kane.—The Lake Superior Mining News, of Nov. 9, contains the following:—By private letters we learn that the bodies of Sir John Franklin and his men have been found by Dr. Kane's party, frozen, perfectly preserved in our last number we give the report of Tattatsiguese derived from one of the Esquimaux Indians, of the discovery of some of the silver used by Franklin's expedition, and marked with his initials. The later report is of the discovery of the bodies, and from our informant we have [illegible] to believe it to be true. ☞ The bread made from unbolted wheat flour, is the best. In some cases a small portion of white bread may be desirable, but the brown, after a short time, will be found more palatable, and conducive to a more regular and healthy condition of the system. It has been ascertained that even dogs can not live over fifty days, fed upon fine flour bread and water, when fed upon such as contained the whole or a large portion of the bran, they are found in no respect to suffer.
